STATEMENT OF INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE

Stopcrush.org files this Amicus Brief in support of the United States.

Stopcrush.org is an initiative and major campaign of the Alliance for Earth, Life, Liberty & Advocacy(AELLA), a tax-exempt, non-profit organization, listed as a public charity under section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code. The main goal of Stopcrush.org is to facilitate a global means of generating no less than complete societal intolerance toward the entire sadistic, prurient animal crush interest. Based upon hits to the Stopcrush.org website, supporters of the Stopcrush.org movement are in the hundreds of thousands worldwide.

Stopcrush.org's mission includes researching the crush industry and educating the public and lawmakers worldwide about the horrors of the industry. Stopcrush.org volunteers around the world investigate the manufacture, purpose and distribution of crush videos. Stopcrush.org volunteers infiltrate the crush community in the hopes of identifying the crushers and distributors and bringing them to justice. These heroic volunteers risk their own safety in an effort to speak for those whose cries for help in these videos are unanswered by the sexually charged dominatrixes who torture them to death. Whenever volunteers uncover the identity of anyone involved, law enforcement is informed. As a result, Stopcrush.org volunteers are in the best possible position to provide empirical data on the crush industry to the Court.

All parties have consented to the filing of this amicus brief pursuant to Fed.R.App.P. 29(a).

...the musings of the crush community. Crush conversations are the same across the country, across the world, across race and culture, across economic status. Crush videos are created solely for sexual gratification, distributed solely for sexual gratification, and sought after solely for sexual gratification. There is no other purpose for crush videos whatsoever. Any discussion to the contrary is merely academic, has no basis in reality, and creates convoluted legal fallacies.

The crush industry is a subset of the sex industry. When researching crush sites, other sex sites pop up on the computer screen offering their wares.

The crushers market their products in private Facebook pages, on semi-secure social network chats, and hidden within certain porn sites. Most crushers use fake names, privacy programs, masks and/or cropping to protect their identity. It is very difficult to track the people involved and therefore difficult to prosecute. Many crush films are produced in foreign countries where the United States has no jurisdiction to prosecute the crushers themselves.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Congress has twice addressed the issue of the distribution of crush videos. The first effort was found unconstitutional in United States v. Stevens, 130 S.Ct. 1577, 559 U.S. 460, 176 L.Ed.2d 435 (2010). Congress reviewed the decision in Stevens closely and redrafted the statute addressing each of the concerns raised in Stevens and narrowly tailoring the amended statute to eliminate those concerns. The amended statute applies solely to animal crush videos. 18 U.S.C. § 48. Crush videos are obscene as well as being integral to criminal conduct; therefore, crush videos are not protected by the First Amendment.

Case precedent and the Congressional record on the legislative history of 18 U.S.C. § 48 are effectively presented in the Government’s Brief and the Amicus Brief of the Human Society. Therefore, this Amicus Brief is focused primarily on factual support for United States’ position found in empirical evidence.

ARGUMENT

A. Crush videos are obscene

Crush videos satisfy the sexual desires of the most depraved humans, those who are sexually turned on by the torture, mutilation and killing of innocent helpless animals and children. These videos are obscene under any definition specifically including the definition controlling in the United States found in Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15, 24 (1973): “works (1) which taken as a whole, appeal to the prurient interest in sex, (2) which portray sexual conduct in a patently offensive way, and (3) which, taken as a whole, do not have serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value.” To be obscene, conduct need not appeal to the sexual interests of all humanity; conduct meets the definition if it appeals to the sexual interests of some members of humanity. United States v. Ragsdale, 426 F.3d 765, 774 (5th Cir. 2005). Judge Lake seems to limit the interpretation of sexual conduct to “ultimate sexual acts” and “masturbation, excretory functions, and lewd exhibition of the genitals.”

Memorandum Opinion at 9. However, this was merely a list of examples of obscene conduct from Miller v. California, not an exhaustive list of all conduct that is sexual conduct. Miller at 2615. In addition to this comment, Judge Lake also specifically states that he believes the acts depicted in the crush videos are non-sexual acts.

Memorandum Opinion 13. Judge Lake’s confusion is certainly understandable. Until one views these videos and reads the comments of the crushers and fans, normal humans cannot possibly comprehend that this conduct is sexual. Crush videos are used for two sexual purposes: masturbation which is on Judge Lake’s list and foreplay for “ultimate sexual acts” with a person. Judge Lake cites Brown v. Entertainment Merchants Ass’n, 131 S.Ct. 2729 (2011) in support of his position that crush videos do not present sexual conduct. However, the California statute that was invalidated by Brown covered violent video games regardless of whether the violence was for prurient interests. Id at 2732. By contrast, crush videos are created solely for sexual purposes. The violence in crush videos is an integral part of the sex act. Therefore, the reliance upon Brown is misplaced.

In ensuring that the amended version of the crush statute resolved the concerns of the Supreme Court, Congress received testimony that obscenity covers unusual deviant acts and that the extreme acts of animal cruelty in crush videos appeal to a specific sexual fetish. Animal Crush Video Prohibition Act of 2010, Pub.L.No.

111-294, § 2(4), 124 Stat. 3177 (2010). Essentially, just because most people do not find the mutilation and destruction of animals sexually motivating does not mean that it is not the intent of the actors and distributors of crush videos to appeal to persons who do find this conduct sexually motivating, making the resulting product obscene.

Justice Stewart wrote "hard-core pornography" is hard to define, but "I know it when I see it." Jacobellis v. Ohio, 378 U.S. 184, 197 (1964). In order to knowledgeably judge obscenity, it is necessary to see the products. The Court has the videos allegedly made by Ashley Richards and Brent Justice and can easily see that these videos are focused on sexual interests, but the Court needs to also know if this intent is consistent across the crush industry in order to balance any existing socially acceptable interest. The Exhibit to this Amicus Brief contains screen shots of crush videos, of crusher advertising, and of crusher conversations about crush videos. This Exhibit is relevant to determining whether crush videos are obscene specifically including whether crush videos appeal to a prurient interest and whether they depict sexual conduct, whether there is a compelling interest in regulating this conduct in order to stop this horrific torture, and in determining the difficulties in prosecuting the crushers themselves. These screen shots result from years of research by stopcrush.org volunteers who search the internet for members of the crush fetish community, infiltrate their social media and document the conduct of the crush fetish community. The Court will see that every single picture, every single advertisement, every single discussion clearly portrays sexual conduct.

In the conversations, look at the “x”s and “o”s reflecting kisses and hugs. Look at the words sexy, fucking, fetish, and mmm. In the pictures, look at the sexy, spiked high-heeled shoes. Look at the garter belts and stockings. Look at the satin shirts, the lace bras, the short shorts, panties revealing buttocks, or no panties at all, and even completely naked women. Notice legs spread suggesting sexual acts, the animal between the legs in mock sexual acts, and in the few that show the face of the crusher, notice the coy sexual looks. Notice the standard tools of the dominatrix trade – the whips, the collars choking the animals’ necks, ropes tying the animals’ legs. Look at the acts of riding the animals and shoving things into the animals’ genitals and anuses. All of these images are clearly seeking to satisfy the sexual desire of this specific sexual fetish referred to as crush fetish.

Then, imagine the cries of the pain and fear, the gasps as the animals struggle to survive, that are the stock and trade of this particular brutal sexual fetish. Throughout the years of Stopcrush.org research, not one video or discussion has ever indicated anything except an intent to satisfy this deviant sexual fetish. Congress followed Justice Stewart’s logic, looked at the crush videos and saw that these videos are obscene. Congress carefully considered the conduct to be regulated, determined it is obscene and drafted a statute that governs only the obscene, unprotected conduct.

The use of Internet security measures, online pseudonyms, masks and cropped photography make it difficult to identify both manufacturers and distributors. Looking at the screen shots in Exhibit A, it is clear that it will be extremely difficult to identify the perpetrators. There is no true identification of the person, generally no unique markings such as tattoos are displayed, and no specific addresses are found on the profiles. Most videos are made in enclosed private nondescript rooms that could be anywhere in the world. When discovered, crushers will close one site to prevent electronic tracking. These precautionary measures make it difficult for law enforcement to find and arrest the crushers. In addition from the screen shots of the conversations and crusher profile pages, it can be determined that many (if not most) of these videos are made in foreign countries. The United States has no jurisdiction to prosecute the crushers in foreign countries. In order to curb this horrific abuse, the United States must prosecute the distributors found in the United States.

B. Section 48 is Constitutional

Section 48, as amended, regulates only unprotected speech that qualifies as obscenity. The Supreme Court held that the original statute was unconstitutional. United States v. Stevens, 130 S.Ct. 1577, 559 U.S. 460, 130 S. Ct. 1577, 176 L.Ed.2d 435 (2010). The amended statute addresses all of the concerns raised in Stevens, as follows.

- 1.

“The statute does not address underlying acts harmful to animals, but only portrayals of such conduct.” Stevens at 1582. The new statute addresses this primary concern in the clarified definition of animal crush video as follows: “(1) depicts actual conduct in which 1 or more living non-human mammals, birds, reptiles, or amphibians is intentionally crushed, burned, drowned, suffocated, impaled, or otherwise subjected to serious bodily injury (as defined in section 1365 and including conduct that if committed against a person and in the special maritime and territorial jurisdiction of the United States, would violate section 2241 and 2242); and (2) is obscene.” 18 U.S.C. § 48. Congress made it clear in the amended version that the statute applies to video in which animals are actually harmed rather than video that depicts animal actors who are not actually harmed but acting.

The Supreme Court believed the original statute was overbroad. “We read § 48 to create a criminal prohibition of alarming breadth. To begin with, the text of the statute’s ban on a ‘depiction of animal cruelty’ nowhere requires that the depicted conduct be cruel. That text applies to ‘any ... depiction’ in which ‘a living animal is intentionally maimed, mutilated, tortured, wounded, or killed.’” Stevens at 1588, quoting the original statute. The amended statute corrects this problem by narrowing the conduct regulated to crush videos and carefully drafting the detailed definition described above that reaches only the animal crush industry and only obscene material.

The Supreme Court was concerned that the text of the original statute, “draws no distinction based on the reason the intentional killing of an animal is made illegal, and includes for example, the humane slaughter of a stolen cow.” Stevens at 1588. The amended statute addresses this concern by excepting from the regulation: “(A) customary and normal veterinary or agricultural husbandry practices; (B) the slaughter of animals for food; or (C) hunting, trapping, or fishing.” 18 U.S.C. §48.

The Supreme Court was also concerned that in the original statute “depictions of illegal conduct extend to conduct that is illegal in only a single jurisdiction.” Stevens at 1588-1589. “Those seeking to comply with the law thus face a bewildering maze of regulations from at least 56 separate jurisdictions.” Stevens at 1589. The amended statute narrowly defines the conduct based upon definitions in federal statutes that apply in all jurisdictions and excludes conduct in the exceptions that is legal in some jurisdictions under state law such as hunting.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons given in this Brief, Amicus Curiae Stopcrush.org urges this Honorable Court to find that the District Court erred in determining that Section 48 violates the Constitution and therefore to reverse the Court's ruling dismissing the case.

Respectfully submitted,
